UN'S MONEY TROUBLES

Money shortages are nothing new at the United Nations, which relies exclusively on its Member Countries for funding. Right now, the situation is particularly difficult, as the Organization is three billion dollars short of what it is owed. Is there a way out of this financial mess? In this edition of World Chronicle, Joseph Connor, Under-Secretary-General for Management at the United Nations, talks about the current financial crisis and its serious implications for the work of the Organization.
